The goal of this training session is to impart practical knowledge of IT security principles and to teach participants the basic skills they need to start evaluating their networks security. 2. How to evaluate the security of networks: an introduction to network scans Security professionals need to have a basic understanding of network security assessment tools to properly evaluate a network for potential security problems. Network scans are the most efficient way to rapidly identify remote vulnerabilities on a network. In this session we will discuss what a scan is, what tools are used to perform a scan, and what kind of results a scan can produce. Attendees of this session will learn: • The basic concepts of network scans; • What tools are available for analyzing network scans; • How to properly interpret the results of a scan; • What can be done with the information gathered. 3. How to evaluate the security of systems inside a network: an introduction to IDS and AV Most common security administrators have no idea what an IDS or AV is. In this session we will discuss how IDSs and AVs work, why they are needed, and how they are evaluated. Attendees will learn: • The basics of IDS
